Project Description

This project will primarily focus on Marginalized communities but we are open to receiving Oral Histories and Oral Futures from everyone.

In our society, marginalization is the social process of becoming or being made marginal (to relegate or confine to a lower social standing or outer limit or edge, as of social standing). Along with material deprivation (such as food and shelter), marginalized individuals are also excluded from services, programs, and policies.

In order to help make marginalized people more visible, we will undertake a project to collect as many of their oral histories as possible. The project will be bring visibility to marginalized people and communities who have suffered from exponentially increasing social injustices as a result of not having their voice heard.

The project shall be based upon a minimum of approximately two hours of interviews collected from all areas of the world.

Consistently, surveys by many international organizations have shown that despite slow and steady progress, people, and especially women, who are marginalized or considered 'the minority' in their areas of the world are still at a disadvantage, compared with other mainstream individuals, in critical areas, including education, employment, access to health care, and involvement in their communities. In addition, historically ethnic and culturally alienated communities at large are at a disadvantage in society. That is why Multicultural Outreach Media makes a focused effort to increase minority and marginalized groups' awareness of, and access to, the media. The services of independent media will help improve their quality of life by providing reliable information and referral through focused multicultural outreach resources.
